

THE DIGESTIVE SYSTEM

Cells are often specialised / have adaptation to help carry out function.

Muscle cells can contract (get shorter). They can contain special protein fibres which can change their length.

Muscle cells are also packed full of mitochondria which provide the energy needed for contraction.

A TISSUE: a group of cells with a similar structure and function.

AN ORGAN: a group of tissues working together for a specific function. Eg the stomach contains muscle tissue and glandular tissue (which release enzymes).

ORGAN SYSTEMS: organs are grouped into organ systems which work together to form organisms.

lipids →  protein
carbohydrates

amylase breaks down starches → sugar

protease breaks down protein → amino acids

lipase breaks down lipids (fat) → glycerol food contains three main nutrients: carbohydrates, tea-starch, protein and lipids (fat).

all of these are large molecules. They are too large to be absorbed into the blood stream so they have to be digested.

During digestion large food molecules are broken down into small molecules by enzymes. The small molecules can then be absorbed into the blood stream.

Mouth: first food is chewed in the mouth. Enzymes in the saliva begin to digest the starch into smaller sugar molecules.

The food is then passed down the oesophagus into the stomach. Enzymes begin the digestion of proteins.

The stomach also contains hydrochloric acid which helps digest proteins.

The churning action of the stomach muscles turns the food into fluid, increasing the surface area for enzymes to digest.

In the small intestine enzymes are released from the liver and pancreas.

The pancreas releases enzymes which continue the digestion of starch and protein. They also start digestion of lipids. RELEASES BILE, secreted up fluid makes its way through large intestine, digestion + neutralised acids where water is absorbed into blood stream.
