Structure and Dynamics of the Pacific Upper Mantle Rafael Katzman, 1998. A new tomographic technique is employed to investigate the structure and dynamics of the Pacific upper mantle. We invert frequency dependent travel times residuals of three component turning and surface waves such as S, SS, SSS, R1, and G1 together with band center travel times of ScS reverberations for the 2D composite structure in the plane of two Pacific corridors. The model parameters include shear speed variations throughout the mantle, perturbations to radial shear wave anisotropy in the uppermost mantle, and the topography of the 410 and 660 discontinuities. The image for the first corridor between Tonga and Oahu, Hawaii, reveals a harmonic pattern of highs and lows having an upper mantle thickness a horizontal wavelength of 1500 km and an amplitude of 3%. High shear velocities underlie each of three northwest trending geoid swells downstream from the major hotspots of the Society, Marquesas, and Hawaiian Islands. The result along the second corridor from Oahu and Ryukyu also exhibits a prominent fast region that extends beneath the entire Hawaiian swell down to depth of 200-300 km. It is therefore implied that the topography of the swells in the central Pacific is supported by a chemical buoyancy mechanism and not by thermal buoyancy. Upper mantle convective rolls may account for the depth extent of the fast anomalies beneath the swells.

Lewis Carroll once wrote a story about a king who wanted a very accurate map of his kingdom The king had a pathologically fastidious eye for detail and consequently decided that the map was to be produced at a scale of 1 1 The scribes dutifully set to and in time the map was made The map carried details of every tree every rock and every blade of grass throughout the entire land The problem occurred when they tried to use it First of all the map was extraordinarily difficult to open out and line up with the countryside Its sheer bulk meant that it took whole armies to carry it and a great host of bureaucrats and technicians to maintain the information Such was the detail of the map that as soon as the wind blew strongly whole sections needed to be redrawn What was worse was that all the farmers protested because the map completely cut out the light from the sun and all the crops died Eventually the howls of protest became so strong that the king was forced to take action He did away with the old paper copy and decided to use the kingdom itself as the map All lived happily ever after There are at least two morals to this tale First you are almost certainly doomed to failure if you do not get the representation of the problem right
