Intercultural Communicative Competence and Short Stays Abroad: Perceptions of Development Sarah

Boye, 2016 The idea of interculturality being an essential part of a language learner's toolkit is widely accepted. Less certain is exactly what interculturality is and how to determine who has it, who does not have it, and importantly, how to get it. This book is concerned with these questions. The work presented here explores the concept of intercultural communicative competence as an aim of foreign language learning. It examines in particular the role of student mobility and how short stays abroad affect higher education students' perceptions of their development of this complex competence. It explores the coinage of the term intercultural communicative competence and the current debate regarding its definition, usage, and usefulness. The work then moves on to describing an empirical study in which students who are studying English at a German university participate in an eight-week short stay abroad to the English-speaking world and are asked about their perceived development of intercultural communicative competence and the ways in which their expectations for the stay abroad are met. Developing intercultural communicative competence is an institutional aim of the stay abroad, and therefore the ways the participants make sense of this competence are of interest. Through case study research and quantitative questionnaires, data are gathered, analysed, and described. The study shows that even a short stay abroad helps develop intercultural communicative competence, albeit in individually different ways. Handbook of Communication and Social Interaction Skills John O. experiences in Liverpool Mamie Mopoyi, 2021-09-17 Seminar paper from the year 2020 in the subject Didactics for the subject English Pedagogy Literature Studies grade 1-3 University of Duisburg-Essen Anglophone Studies course. Interculturality in Theory and Practice language English abstract. The following report gives an insight into my experiences and my process of developing intercultural communicative competences. It is without a doubt safe to assume that a stay abroad is a life-changing experience. Choosing to stay abroad is a great opportunity to practice one's language skills and develop intercultural competences. Whenever I thought of my stay abroad, I was intrigued by the idea of discovering new cultures and exploring new places. For someone who is attached to the familiar, the sheer thought of leaving one's comfort zone might be the biggest obstacle in this journey. And still, each year, thousands of people flock to other parts of the world, perhaps to gain awareness of different people, cultures, and places. As professor O'Dowd states, the direct contact with members of the target culture can offer opportunities for developing the skills and attitudes of ICC, even though it's not proven that such a contact will easily lead to intercultural learning. Nevertheless, these people come with a particular set of attitudes and stereotypes regarding the different people and cultures of the countries. Therefore, it is crucial to know how the perception can change through interaction with others. According to this, it can be said that offering broader access to cultures might enable people to mingle in these cultures This requires a certain finesse and knowledge Otherwise a welcoming encounter of different people and cultures cannot be assured but rather a clash of different cultures Therefore language learning cannot be separated from culture learning as language manifests many of the social actions of a society and expresses the values and beliefs which underlie these actions Michael Byram s model of Intercultural Communicative Competence in short ICC can serve as an explanatory model to trace my development during my stay abroad Mind you although I spent more than three months in Liverpool I cannot draw fixed conclusions about certain things Therefore my knowledge and attitudes might differ compared to a person who spent a year abroad

Intercultural Language Use and Language Learning Eva Alcon Soler, Maria Pilar Safont Jorda, 2007-05-24 Eva Alcon Soler Maria Pilar Safont Jorda Universitat Jaume I Spain The main purpose of the present book is to broaden the scope of research on the development of intercultural communicative competence Bearing this purpose in mind English learners are considered as intercultural speakers who share their interest for engaging in real life communication According to Byram and Fleming 1998 the intercultural speaker is someone with knowledge of one or more cultures and social identities and who enjoys discovering and maintaining relationships with people from other cultural backgrounds although s he has not been formally trained for that purpose Besides possessing knowledge of at least two cultures is the case of many learners in bilingual or multilingual communities In these contexts the objective of language learning should then focus on developing intercultural competence which in turn may involve promoting language diversity while encouraging English as both a means and an end of instruction see Alcon in this volume This is the idea underlying the volume which further sustains Kramsch s argument 1998 against the native non native dichotomy Following that author we also believe that in a multilingual world where learners may belong to more than one speech community their main goal is not to become a native speaker of English but to use this language as a tool for interaction among many other languages and cultures
