their identities as exemplary mother educators preserved their claims to femininity and simultaneously entered the public arena. By adapting literary strategies popular in nineteenth century juvenile narratives, domestic novels, and slave narratives to document slavery's violation of religious, economic, and political principles, these women spoke out against an institution that stood in marked contrast to the beliefs they held so dear. This anthology aims to fill the important gap in our understanding of women's literary productions about race and gender and illustrates the limitations of a canon that excludes such voices.
