Yin Chih Wen: The Tract of the Quiet Way And Chinese Fables, Folk and Fairy Tales Daisetz Teitaro Suzuki, Paul Carus, Mary Hayes Davis, Chow-Leung, May Wentworth, The Yin Chih Wen is a religious ethical tract which in spite of its popularity all over the Middle Kingdom has not as yet so far as we know been translated into any Western language Next to the Kan Ying Pien it is read and studied and taught both in schools and at the home and there is probably no family in China without it but its contents are very little known in the Western world and we have only once met with references to it by Professor Douglas in his Confucianism and Taoism under the title of Book of Secret Blessings Our frontispiece drawn by Shen Chin Ching represents Wen Ch ang Ti Ch n one of the highest divinities of China revealing himself to the author of the tract Wen Ch ang is the name of the god and Ti Ch n his title The picture represents the god as accompanied by two attendants The white charger on which he has come down from heaven stands in the foreground The god is seated on a stool and the scribe of the book reverently kneels before him holding the Yin Chih Wen in his hands The inscription of the picture reads Ti tze Shen Chin Ching hui which means the humble disciple Shen Chin Ching pinxit Ti means younger brother and tze child here used as a diminutive Little Younger brother is the usual term meaning disciple or devotee by which title the artist here calls himself to indicate that he is a follower of the religious doctrines taught in the Yin Chih Wen Wen Ch ang means scripture glory The word wen is the same character which occurs in the last word of the title of our book It denotes writing in general and is especially applied to short exhortations of a religious nature such as are commonly called in Western terminology tracts Hence we translate The Tract of the Quiet Way not the book as Douglas has it With reference to the god's name we translate wen by scripture because in English the term scripture refers mainly to religious literature and is similar to the Chinese original in so far as it has a devotional ring Ch ang means glory or radiance the character being composed of two suns indicating an intensified brightness of light To characterize the god Wen Ch ang or scripture glory as god of literature as is sometimes done is to say the least misleading He is the god of learning in general and in Chinese high schools a hall is dedicated to him as the patron saint of education refinement and especially moral instruction through religious books Belles lettres form only one and in fact an insignificant branch of his department He is above all the god of divine revelation through scripture The rank of Wen Ch ang in the world of gods is Emperor or Ti and the word Ti Ch n the higher emperor is commonly translated by lord superior The word ch n means superior or master and so Ti Ch n Lord Superior might also be translated imperial master Ch n is the term by which ch n tze the higher man is denoted in Lao Tze s Tao Teh King an anticipation of Nietzsche s superman only with this difference that Lao Tze s higher man bears a great resemblance to Christ and Buddha while Nietzsche s superman is more like Kubla Khan or Attila or Napoleon The term ch nis commonly applied also to leading thinkers such as Lao Tze and Confucius The title Ti emperor is also borne by the god of war Kwan Ti and if the latter is compared to the archangel Michael the former Wen Ch ang should be likened to Gabriel In fact we cannot deny that there is a strong probability of historical connection between these highest princes among the angels for the conception of both may have been derived from Babylonian prototypes Michael being represented by Marduk and Gabriel by Nebo Michael means literally who is like God and seems to designate that divine presence viz the ineffable name which is believed to be equal to God but in the classical period of Jewish monotheism the word Michael was explained not as a characterization of the archangel as being like God but as expressing faith in monotheism implying the proposition that there is no second to God Michael according to the angel lore of the Hebrews is the representative of God and so he is identified with God s cause He is the guardian angel of Israel the chosen people and also commander in chief of the angelic hosts As Marduk fought with Tiamat so Michael wages war against the dragon Rev xii 7 Gabriel is as different in character from Michael as Wen Ch ang is from Kwan Ti Gabriel means the man of God He is deemed superior to all other angels except Michael and is generally represented as the angel of God s special revelation and the interpreter of God s intentions Thus it is Gabriel who explains Daniel s vision nor can we doubt that the angel with an inkhorn by his side mentioned in Ezekiel x 2 3 was Gabriel the scribe of God Old Testament scholars have pointed out his resemblance to the Babylonian god Nebo who in the monuments is depicted in human form with an inkhorn at his side differently from the Cherubim the human headed winged bulls which fact throws light on the vision of Ezekiel alluded to above and shows that there is a specific meaning in the name man of God In the New Testament Gabriel continues to represent God s revelation It is he who announces the birth of John the Baptist and of Jesus There is no figure in Christian tradition which would resemble Wen Ch ang more closely than Gabriel As Kwan Ti the god of war was represented to have lived on earth as a man so Wen Ch ang or scripture glory is said to have been an ancient Chinese sage but little is known of the man to whom the Chinese tradition refers According to the commentator he lived during the T ang dynasty 620 950 A D and his secular name was Chang O Y eh was his native province but later he moved to Tzu T ung in the district of Shu We are told that his personality was distinguished by nobility and piety His writings were clear luminous and forcible He began to exercise a moral power over the people who unconsciously felt his spirituality He entered for a while upon an official career but not satisfied with the course of politics he resigned his government position and lived as a saintly recluse The people of Shu showed great affection for him and when he died built a temple in his honor calling it Temple of the Sage of Tzu Tung People far and near came to offer prayers which were remarkably well responded to by the sage Everybody then said There is in the heavens a star called Wen Chang the sage i e Chang O must have been its incarnation Our tract bears the name of the god Wen Chang and accordingly he is regarded as its author or at least as the divinity who has guided the pen of the man who composed it but unless we assume that Chang O was the author which is not positively impossible the name of the scribe who made himself the mouthpiece of Wen Chang and who in human consideration ought to be regarded as its author is not recorded
