Transformative Activism in a World of Structural Oppression Callum Ingram,2025-04-30 Structural oppression is the injustice that builds a world it forms the foundations of identities and communities defines the boundaries of shared realities and shapes common sense understandings of what is permissible possible and desirable Anti oppression activists find themselves navigating this world driven by a sense of moral urgency to seek transformative change despite the hostile and disorienting terrain they face This book develops a map of the world that these activists must navigate and transform finding a guide in theological and political traditions that emphasize our duty to recognize the redemptive possibilities already present in an unredeemed world The resulting account of a redemptive hermeneutic posture generates promising strategies that activists might use to build a broad transformative movement and make a post oppression world more possible
