Why Architects Matter Flora Samuel, 2018-03-09 Why Architects Matter examines the key role of research led ethical architects in promoting wellbeing sustainability and innovation It argues that the profession needs to be clear about what it knows and the value of what it knows if it is to work successfully with others Without this clarity the marginalization of architects from the production of the built environment will continue preventing clients businesses and society from getting the buildings that they need The book offers a strategy for the development of a twenty first century knowledge led built environment including tools to help evidence develop and communicate that value to those outside the field Knowing how to demonstrate the impact and value of their work will strengthen practitioners ability to pitch for work and access new funding streams This is particularly important at a time of global economic downturn with ever greater competition for contracts and funds driving down fees and making it imperative to prove value at every level Why Architects Matter straddles the spheres of Practice Management and Law History and Theory Design Housing Sustainability Health Marketing and Advice for Clients bringing them into an accessible whole The book will therefore be of interest to professional architects architecture students and anyone with an interest in our built environment and the role of professionals within it

Light in Architecture Maggie Toy, 1997 Brogan has selected a wide range of architects and projects that in their different approaches convey the power and innate relationship we all have with light and shadow

The Architect, the Cook and Good Taste Petra Hagen Hodgson, Rolf Toyka, 2007-03-29 Since time immemorial cooking and building have been among humanity's most basic occupations. Both of them are rooted in necessity but both of them also possess a cultural as well as a sensory aesthetic dimension. And while it is true that cooking is a transitory art form it gives expression to the periods of human cultural history just as architecture does. Moreover both arts accord a central role to the materials employed. Both involve measuring and proportioning, shaping and designing, assembling and composing. This book pursues the astonishing parallels and deeply rooted connections between the art of building and that of cooking. A variety of essays takes up questions of materiality and proportioning. Attention will also be given to food cultivation and architecture to the places where meals are prepared as well as a range of different culinary spaces. With articles by Annette Gigon, Stanislaus von Moos, Claudio Silvestrin, Ian Ritchie and others.

Architecture Emily Katrencik, 2001

Through the methodology of a critical artistic practice. It is the intent of this thesis to specify a set of buildings and social systems on the edge in between. To present a set of real, imagined or modeled exemplary structures in order to discuss, describe and critique the codes for their construction. This thesis addresses the self and its ability to test this edge by riding and experimenting in between the interstitial to further look at issues of compliance, resistance and failure of both the codes and of the individual's ability or disability to act because of the codes. The edge, the solid, ragged, engineered and porous edge is where I have placed myself for study. To investigate projects that address the ability to infiltrate these areas, the abundant and empty spaces of buildings, the subset to all lived spaces by the navigation and unpacking of the social interstices. The following writings and photographs of my own form a document of this critical artistic action. There are subsets to the main space of this document just as there are in physical space. This document may shift sometimes. Time and space do not always line up and glitches can occur. Time can be cut and reconnected just as architecture can be cut and reconnected to itself. While investigating space and architecture for this thesis, the building I was located in, N51 52 at MIT, underwent a major renovation. When one is intently involved in a discourse, thoughts can cause tension in their own structure. The questions that I set out to investigate caused this kind of tension: Can we engage architecture to counter its consumption? How can the self merge with architecture? Can I ingest an entire building? When additional stressors were added to my environment and jackhammers chewed the facade of the building, I was based in these questions were difficult to keep in focus. Boundaries were broken between me and the building; the building began to mimic my own work from previous projects. The building deconstructed all around me, shifted its own form daily. The architecture became physically and psychologically complicated to navigate through. A blurring occurred between myself and the building of the figure and the ground; the building was no longer containing me, so I attempted to contain it.

What is the connection between the elite world of avant garde architectural design and the ordinary everyday buildings which most of us inhabit in our daily lives Architecture and the Vernacular explores the troubled borders between architectural design and the everyday world In contrast to the view widely held in architectural circles this book argues that there has always been a constant flow of ideas in both directions between the world of designed architecture of icons and big name architects on the one hand and the world of ordinary anonymous buildings on the other Whether rural vernacular buildings shotgun shacks shanty towns suburban housing or edge of town retail barns these typologies may have been marginalized but they have been far from mute in the formation of architectural discourse Providing an accessible examination of the key academic questions and debates concerning the relationship between architecture the vernacular and the everyday this book is also a powerful argument for a new way of thinking about the making of buildings and the practice of architecture Many of the issues addressed go right to the heart of the identity crisis that architecture faces in the twenty first century What is architecture What defines an architect And what can architects and designers learn from the everyday world around them Architecture ,1915
