Treatise on Geomorphology, 2013-02-27 The changing focus and approach of geomorphic research suggests that the time is opportune for a summary of the state of discipline The number of peer reviewed papers published in geomorphic journals has grown steadily for more than two decades and more importantly the diversity of authors with respect to geographic location and disciplinary background geography geology ecology civil engineering computer science geographic information science and others has expanded dramatically As more good minds are drawn to geomorphology and the breadth of the peer reviewed literature grows an effective summary of contemporary geomorphic knowledge becomes increasingly difficult The fourteen volumes of this Treatise on Geomorphology will provide an important reference for users from undergraduate students looking for term paper topics to graduate students starting a literature review for their thesis work and professionals seeking a concise summary of a particular topic Information on the historical development of diverse topics within geomorphology provides context for ongoing research discussion of research strategies equipment and field methods laboratory experiments and numerical simulations reflect the multiple approaches to understanding Earth's surfaces and summaries of outstanding research questions highlight future challenges and suggest productive new avenues for research Our future ability to adapt to geomorphic changes in the critical zone very much hinges upon how well landform scientists comprehend the dynamics of Earth's diverse surfaces This Treatise on Geomorphology provides a useful synthesis of the state of the discipline as well as highlighting productive research directions that Educators and students researchers will find useful Geomorphology has advanced greatly in the last 10 years to become a very interdisciplinary field Undergraduate students looking for term paper topics to graduate students starting a literature review for their thesis work and professionals seeking a concise summary of a particular topic will find the answers they need in this broad reference work which has been designed and written to accommodate their diverse backgrounds and levels of understanding Editor in Chief Prof J F Shroder of the University of Geomorphology of Desert Environments Anthony J. Parsons, A. D. Abrahams, 2009-03-20 About one third of the Earth s land surface experiences a desert climate and this area supports approximately 15% of the planet s population This percentage continues to grow and with this growth comes the need to acquire and apply an understanding of desert geomorphology Such an understanding is vital in managing scarce and fragile resources and in mitigating natural hazards This authoritative reference book is comprehensive in its coverage of the geomorphology of desert environments and is arranged thematically It begins with an overview of global deserts proceeds through treatments of weathering hillslopes rivers piedmonts lake basins and aeolian surfaces and concludes with a discussion of the role of climatic change Written by a team of international authors

all of whom are active in the field the chapters cover the spectrum of desert geomorphology

Fluvial Megafans on Earth and Mars Justin Wilkinson, Yanni Gunnell, 2023-05-18 Megafans are partial cones of river sediment that reach unexpectedly large dimensions with the largest on Earth being 700 km long Due to recent developments in space based observations global mapping efforts have shown that modern megafan features cover vast landscapes on most continents This book provides a new inventory of nearly 300 megafans across five continents Chapters focus on regional studies of megafans from all continents barring North America and Antarctica The major morphological attributes of megafans and multi megafan landscapes are discussed and the principal controls on megafan development are examined The book also compares megafans with alluvial fans deltas floodplains and the recently recognised major avulsive fluvial system MAFS The final part of the book discusses the application of megafan research to economic geology aquifers and planetary geology including layered deposits on Mars This is an invaluable reference for researchers in geomorphology sedimentology and physical geography

Arid Zone Geomorphology David S. G. Thomas, 2011-02-08 The new edition of Arid Zone Geomorphology aims to encapsulate the advances that have been made in recent years in the investigation and explanation of landforms and geomorphological processes in drylands Building on the success of the previous two editions the Third Edition has been completely revised and updated to reflect the latest developments in the field Whilst this latest edition will remain a comprehensive reference to the subject the book has been restructured to include regional case studies throughout to enhance student understanding and is clearly defined into five distinct sections Firstly the book introduces the reader to Large Scale Controls and Variability in Drylands and then moves on to consider Surface Processes and Characteristics The Work of Water The Work of the Wind The book concludes with a section on Living with Dryland Geomorphology that includes a chapter on geomorphological hazards and the human impact on these environments Once again recognised world experts in the field have been invited to contribute chapters in order to present a comprehensive and up to date overview of current knowledge about the processes shaping the landscape of deserts and arid regions In order to broaden the appeal of the Third Edition the book has been reduced in extent by 100 pages and the Regional chapters have been omitted in favour of the inclusion of key regional case studies throughout the book The Editor is also considering the inclusion of a supplementary website that could include further images problems and case studies

Varieties of Fluvial Form Andrew J. Miller, Avijit Gupta, 1999-03-12 This collection of papers is based largely on contributions by participants in a series of special sessions at the June 1995 South East Asia Conference of the International Association of Geomorphologists The concept that draws these papers together is best explained in the following excerpt from the call for papers that was issued in advance of the conference The purpose of this special session is to provide an opportunity for discussion of the diversity of fluvial forms that may arise in unusual settings These may include settings where external forcing factors exert a powerful influence precluding or modifying the type of equilibrium form that is expected to develop under quasi stable conditions in an alluvial channel for example patterns of response to tectonic activity longitudinal variations in channel and floodplain form associated with spatially varying patterns of bedrock lithology or jointing arid region rivers with longitudinal discharge trends that are not monotonically increasing Also of potential interest are morphological features forming under climatic hydrologic regimes associated with monsoon tropical wet extremely arid or extremely cold environments or patterns of vegetation distribution that exert a controlling influence on channel form It is hoped that the papers contributed to this session will encompass a broad range of geographic as well as morphological diversity The underlying premise was that the world's rivers encompass a wide range of influences and associated fluvial forms but that the geomorphic literature traditionally has focused most intensively on a subset of those forms mostly comprised of alluvial rivers from humid temperate semiarid or proglacial environments and may not treat a spectrum of morphological types that is proportionately representative of the rivers that actually exist on the earth's surface Thus the intention of this volume is first and foremost to present an international set of case studies with a strong descriptive component representing the diversity of fluvial forms To quote Baker and Komatsu in the opening paper of this volume excitement and pleasure in science derive not so much from achieving the final explanation as from discovering the fascinating range of new phenomena to be explained It is our hope that readers of this volume will share some of that excitement and pleasure
