

Key concepts in disability

Debates have raged within the fields of philosophy, health, and the social sciences about what constitutes disability and how it should be measured. Greater consensus has now emerged, as evidenced by the International Classification of Functioning, Disability and Health (ICF, 2001)¹ and the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (2006).²

Both the ICF and the Convention view disability as the outcome of complex interactions between health conditions and features of an individual's physical, social, and attitudinal environment that hinder their full and effective participation in society. Many of us will experience disability temporarily or permanently at some point in our lives. Most who survive to old age will be increasingly disabled in their final years.³

Traditionally, people with disabilities have been viewed through a medical lens.⁴ Disability has been narrowly equated with an individual's health status, impairment, or capacity limitation. This overly medicalised view fails to address the social factors, discrimination, prejudice, and inaccessibility,⁵ that prevent full participation and contribute to the overall disability experience. Disability is a social issue and by addressing these barriers, society can provide individuals with disabilities the opportunity to exercise their rights on an equal basis with all others.

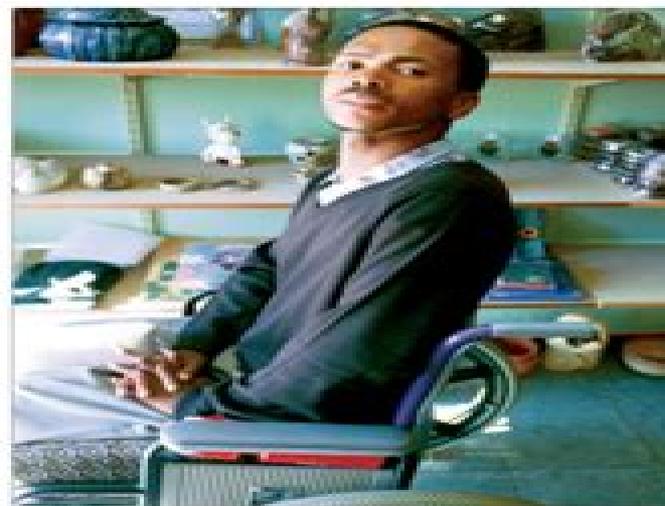

Removing barriers is not a matter of goodwill or charity, but of human rights. People with disabilities have the same human rights as everyone else, but these rights have not historically been respected.⁶ People with disabilities have often been denied the right to education and work, to marry and raise a family, to participate in community life, to choose to what extent they will use available health-care services, and indeed the right to life itself. While all categories of rights apply to people with disabilities, additional measures (eg, access to support services, vocational rehabilitation, or other habilitation services) might need to be put in place to enable individuals with disabilities to exercise their rights effectively. Society is obliged to do all that can be done to facilitate the enjoyment of these human rights by people with disabilities. The failure to remove barriers is another kind of violation of such rights.

Disability is a neglected development issue. People with disabilities are disproportionately represented among the world's poor and tend to be poorer than those without disabilities.⁷ Poverty might cause disability through malnutrition, dangerous working or living conditions, and poor health care.⁸ Disability can cause poverty by preventing the participation of individuals with disabilities in education and the economic and social life of their communities.⁹

People with disabilities require the same range of health services for the diagnosis and treatment of disease, or the promotion, maintenance, and restoration of health as people without disabilities. When disabled people have specific health problems related to their disability, they also require services designed to minimise and prevent further problems in functioning, for example through appropriate medical care and health-related rehabilitation.¹⁰ When their health condition has stabilised, there might be no further need for specific medical interventions.

Disability is multifactorial and complex. Interventions to alleviate the disadvantages experienced by people with disabilities need to be appropriate. Responses depend on the disability and on individual choice, and range from medical care through rehabilitation, support services, and psychological interventions, to Social Determinants of Health for the Global Aging Population in Pandemic and Disaster Environments Lené Levy-Storms, Mary Beth Morrissey, Marcia G. Ory, Camille Castelyn, Soohyoung Rain Lee, 2025-02-18 From a biopsychosocial perspective physical and to a lesser extent mental health have been a priority for researchers policymakers and healthcare providers relative to social health The hegemony of physical health weakened during the COVID pandemic as mental and social health also emerged as equally important and at risk at the same time Not since the 1960s has society attended to the social vulnerabilities of older adults particularly in institutional settings For the first time the urgency of providing care for older adults has transcended physical settings as frontline workers in hospitals prisons schools and other community based settings as well as families in their own homes also emerged as vulnerable The institutional care workforce faces an ongoing crisis at the same time some countries have restricted migration posing a threat to in home and community based long term care COVID has forced healthcare policymakers to prioritize both acute and long term health issues simultaneously as society tries to regain full functionality COVID and future natural and unnatural disasters associated with climate change threats to democracy discrimination against societal groups based on age gender race ethnicity religion and income status promise to challenge us all to acknowledge and act such that our well being is everybody's well being across the life course We are all aging and how different age groups fare affects how other age groups fare

Key Concepts and Debates in Health and Social Policy Nigel Malin, Stephen Wilmot, Jill Manthorpe, 2002 This book identifies key social concepts and explores their relevance for health and welfare policy and for the practice of professionals such as nurses and social workers who are involved in the delivery of services and provision The text adopts an ideologies of welfare approach using examples of recent policy shifts to illustrate theoretical and political tensions This shift in emphasis away from the traditional approach of documenting policy areas is an important feature of the book The concepts are organized in terms of doctrinal contests This allows the authors to explore the tension between different approaches and ways of defining social policy The aim is to help professionals identify these tensions to be aware of the strategic choices which have been made in national and agency policy and to locate their own practice in relationship to these choices It draws upon the continuing debate around the Third Way and New Labour policies as they apply to health and social welfare and identifies tensions within a non ideological pragmatic set of practices
