Background: Family planning is the foundation of sexual and reproductive health, and necessary for achieving the Sustainable Development Goals. Yet, the needs of women with disabilities and their access to these services have been neglected for decades, especially in Low and Middle-income Countries. To improve utilization of these services among women with disabilities, they have to be aware and informed about the services. This study was conducted to examine awareness and mass media sources of information on family planning between women with and without disabilities.

Methods: This study used data from the 2008 Nigeria Demographic and Health Surveys (NDHS). Our analytic sample included 26,585 women between 15 and 49 years of age who answered the disability module. We compared demographics and socioeconomic characteristics of women with and without disabilities using the chi-square test for categorical variables. In addition, we conducted logistic regressions to estimate the unadjusted and adjusted odds ratio (with 95% confidence intervals) for level of awareness and mass media sources of information on modern contraceptive methods, using women without a disability as the reference group.

Results: Finding showed that women with disabilities have poor awareness about family planning compared to women without disabilities even after adjusting for all covariates (AOR = 0.42, 95% CI: 0.23–0.76, $P < 0.05$). We also found that women with disabilities are less likely to receive information about family planning from any of the available mass media channels even after adjusting for covariates (AOR = 0.46, 95% CI: 0.22–0.98, $P < 0.05$).

Conclusions: The study revealed that women with disabilities Nigeria have poor awareness about modern family planning methods compared to non-disabled women. They are also less likely to receive information about modern family planning methods compared to non-disabled women. To effectively reach women with disabilities, information barriers must be eliminated, coupled with increased opportunities to access family planning information. Donors, government, and other relevant stakeholders should

Knowledge Service Engineering Handbook Jussi Kantola, Waldemar Karwowski, 2016-04-19 Edited by Jussi Kantola the founding faculty member of the world's first university Knowledge Service Engineering Department at Korea Advanced Institute of Science and Technology and Waldemar Karwowski from the Department of Industrial Engineering and Management Systems at UCF Knowledge Service Engineering Handbook defines what knowledge services engineering means and how it is different from service engineering and service production This groundbreaking handbook explores recent advances in knowledge service engineering from the accomplished researchers and practitioners in this field from around the world and provides engineering systemic industry and consumer use viewpoints to knowledge service systems and engineering paradigms The handbook outlines how to acquire and utilize knowledge in the 21st century presenting multiple cultural aspects including US European and Asian perspectives Organized into four parts it begins with an introduction to the main concepts of knowledge services It then explores data information and knowledge based engineering methods and applications that can be used to develop knowledge services followed by discussions of the importance of human networks in knowledge services The handbook concludes with descriptions of high performance knowledge service systems This structure allows different uses the information can be looked up as needed or read in the order presented As with any new field the excitement lies in seeing how to combine these advances in data information and human parts of knowledge services in the future While most books on this subject concentrate on data information or knowledge this handbook integrates coverage of all three thus providing a complete examination of sustainable knowledge services The handbook has been carefully designed to be of use to professionals who develop new knowledge services and related businesses for academic researchers and lecturers to start new research projects and for students studying knowledge services knowledge service production and knowledge service business

The Grammar of Knowledge Alexandra Y. Aikhenvald, R. M. W. Dixon, 2014-02-28 The Grammar of Knowledge offers both a linguistic and anthropological perspective on the expression of information sources as well as inferences assumptions probability and possibility and gradations of doubt and beliefs in a range of languages The book investigates twelve different languages from families including Tibeto Burman Nakh Dagestani and Austronesian all of which share the property of requiring the source of information to be specified in every sentence In these languages it may not be possible to say merely that the man went fishing Instead the source of evidence for the statement must also be specified usually through the use of evidential markers For example it may be necessary to indicate whether the speaker saw the man go fishing has simply assumed that the man went fishing or was told that he went fishing by a third party Some languages such as Hinuq and Tatar distinguish between first hand and non first hand information sources others such as Ersu mark three distinct types of information directly required inferred or assumed and reported Some require an even greater level of specification Ash ninka Peren from South America has a specific marker to express suspicions or misgivings Like others in the series the book illustrates and examines these aspects of language in different cultural and linguistic settings It will interest linguists of all persuasions as well as linguistically minded anthropologists
