About Counselling

Counselling provides a confidential space for people to talk about their life, relationships, thoughts, actions and feelings with someone who is interested in understanding and helping them. Counsellors don't give their clients "the answer" or direct advice, but the counselling relationship enables clients to find their own way through their present difficulties.

I believe for counselling to have the best chance of being effective it is important that the client is permitted to keep their counselling relationship private. I also understand that you are trusting me to work with your child and are entitled to know what that involves and to be updated on how the work is going. With this in mind, please note the following:

- Please allow your child to decide whether and how much they wish to talk with you about their sessions.
- If your child discloses something I believe indicates risk of serious harm to themselves or others then I will be in touch with you. (See the 'Confidentiality' section below.)
- Please feel free to contact me to request an update on how the sessions are going and I will then consult with your child and provide an answer.
- I check in with my clients on a regular basis to see if they are finding the work we are doing together helpful. If they are not then we will bring our work to a close.
- Most of my work uses talk therapy. However, sometimes we might decide together to use other means like a dry erase board, sand tray, drawing materials etc.
