California Street:

San Francisco's California Street Cable Cars Walter Rice, Emiliano Echeverria, Michael Dolgushkin, 2008 San Francisco's internationally recognized cable cars are the symbol of the individual character of a great city. The California Street cable car line is one of only three remaining lines in the city. The California Street Railway or Cal Cable was developed and opened by Leland Stanford, one of the builders of the transcontinental railroad and later founder of Stanford University. Indeed, the iconic line intimately connected with some of the West's pioneer businessmen was sold, expanded, and reached its peak mileage just after 1890, only to be destroyed in the great earthquake and fire of 1906. As resilient as the city it served, Cal Cable was rebuilt and lasted as an independent business longer than any other private San Francisco transit operation. Cut down to its present form in 1954, that remnant and its double-ended cars survive as an integral part of today's cable car system.

California Street Niven Busch, 2015-01-16. If you locked the window the past crept under the door. As Jessica Saxe lies dying in a hospital, the story of the Saxe family, Anchylus her husband, and Pamela, Alexandra, and Sharon their three daughters slowly unfolds, meandering backward and forward in time as the author skillfully merges the memory of the past with the challenges of the present and the reflection that hindsight kindles. While it could be said that this is a rags to riches story of a man irascible, life-loving, and arrogant who begins at the bottom rung of the San Francisco newspaper publishing business and builds an empire, it is more than that. Sometimes elegant, sometimes gritty, it is the story of an era. It is the story of a family at odds, about a family secret, and about children finding themselves and challenging the world of their parents. It is about integrity, firmness under fire, finding and losing love, making mistakes and righting them, facing the passage of time, and coming to terms in the end. A rich story, richly and powerfully told.
