Editorial on the Research Topic

Beyond PD-1: novel checkpoint receptors and ligands as targets for immunotherapy

In recent years immunotherapy has become one of the most promising technologies to treat advanced tumors. The idea of modulating the immune system has improved the treatment of cancer patients. While great success has been seen with inhibitors of PD-1, the potential for targeting other cells and ligands in the tumor microenvironment remains vast. This Research Topic emphasizes the potential of targeting both inhibitory and co-stimulatory receptors to reinvigorate anti-tumor immune responses, mainly focusing on receptors other than PD-1.

Some of the most promising research concerns the potential of targeting VISTA, an inhibitory B7 family molecule that can be expressed on tumor cells and myeloid cells in the tumor microenvironment, particularly in immunologically cold tumors. Duan et al. explored the role of VISTA in acute myeloid leukemia and multiple myeloma. VISTA co-expresses with other checkpoint receptors (e.g. PD-1, TIM-3) and may influence prognosis, being associated with poor overall survival in pancreatic or prostate cancers, making it a potential target for immunotherapy. Iadonato et al. report on the creation of a humanized anti VISTA antibody that was tested in colon cancer and melanoma models, followed by promising toxicology and pharmacokinetics studies in monkeys.

TIM-3 and LAG-3 are inhibitory immune checkpoints implicated in immune modulation that have received growing interest in recent years. In ovarian cancer, TIM-3 affects the immune microenvironment and T-cell function. Chang et al. assessed its potential as a therapeutic target, discussing both the regulatory role of TIM-3 and the challenges in developing effective TIM-3-based therapies. Luo et al. explored LAG-3 and the promising status of several inhibitors under development, while Amrane et al. investigated the potential for HLA-DR, the ligand for LAG-3. While its role in hot tumors may be important, HLA-DR's potential for direct clinical targeting is limited by
