Doing science is like playing in a string quartet. It depends on the talent, training, integrity, and dedication of all of the participants. It also depends on their ability to work in ensemble. No one in the quartet sounds any better than the other players allow them to sound. That is as true for the mighty first viola as for the lowly viola. And when everything works just right, the music is exhilarating and a delight to hear.

For me, doing science has been a pleasure precisely because of the ensembles I have fallen in with. I have been privileged to work with superb violinists, hard working violists, and cheerful cellists. Even when our recitals haven't gone as well as they should have, even when we have received only polite applause, we have enjoyed the music anyway, and we have learned from it. Our next recitals were always better.

My collaborators on the chapters in this collection were Sam Hartick, Thomas Carlson, Richard Gerrig, Catherine Marshall, Edward Schaefer, Michael Schuber, Robert Schroeder, and Deanna Wilkes-Gibbs. To them I owe inexpressible gratitude. But many of the ideas represented here developed out of other collaborations with Susan Brennan, Ellen Frosch, Susan Harland, Ellen Isaacs, Barbara Malt, David Morrow, Gregory Murphy, Karen Ravn, Gladis Rodden, Dale Schenk, and Heather Stark. To them I owe the same gratitude. Many others have read, commented on, or offered advice on one or another of these chapters, and they include Kent Bach, Philip Barwood, Lawrence Barsalou, Irving Eiderman, Alexandra Belyarova, Keith Brown, Helen Clark, Florence Edwards, David Evans, Anne Fernald, Charles Fillmore, James Fox, Simon Garrod, Gerald Gauthier, Raymond Gibbs,

Arenas Of Language Use:

Arenas of Language Use Herbert H. Clark, 1992 When we think of the ways we use language we think of face to face conversations telephone conversations reading and writing and even talking to oneself These are arenas of language use theaters of action in which people do things with language But what exactly are they doing with language What are their goals and intentions By what processes do they achieve these goals In these twelve essays Herbert H Clark and his colleagues discuss the collective nature of language the ways in which people coordinate with each other to determine the meaning of what they say According to Clark in order for one person to understand another there must be a common ground of knowledge between them He shows how people infer this common ground from their past conversations their immediate surroundings and their shared cultural background Clark also discusses the means by which speakers design their utterances for particular audiences and coordinate their use of language with other participants in a language arena He argues that language use in conversation is a collaborative process where speaker and listener work together to establish that the listener understands the speaker s meaning Since people often use words to mean something quite different from the dictionary definitions of those words Clark offers a realistic perspective on how speakers and listeners coordinate on the meanings of words This collection presents outstanding examples of Clark s pioneering work on the pragmatics of language use and it will interest psychologists linguists computer scientists and philosophers Library of Congress Subject

English in Denmark Peter Harder, 2009 Volume 9 takes up the questions national sociolinguistic strategic economic and educational which arise in relation to the increasing use of English alongside national or vernacular languages focusing on its use as the language of instruction in Danish Universities Inevitably this also makes globalisation a theme of this issue The dilemmas of the universities however have a special character within this wider issue partly because they are in the frontline of globalisation processes and partly because they are regarded as having new and enhanced social significance in the post industrial society In addition to the academic articles in this issue there is a series of position statements written by some of the major participants in the Danish debate on language policy in the universities They were invited to state in about 500 words their essential views on the theme Their contributions give some of the flavour of the argument that has been going on with increasing intensity in Denmark for the past ten years
