Dynamic Consultation In A Changing Workplace:

Dynamic Consultation in a Changing Workplace Edward B. Klein, Faith G. Gabelnick, Peter Herr, 2000 The authors examine the role of the consultant in assisting leaders to understand change from a dynamic systems perspective and to manage that change strategically The case examples they present emphasize the need for consultants to connect the internal psychological landscapes of executives managers and employees with their external manifestations during times of organizational transformation while remaining attuned to the impact of these issues on the consultant's own lives and work
