Researchers practitioners and policy makers will find that The Challenge of Community Policing skillfully bridges the gap between the theory and everyday practice of community police reform In this exceedingly informative collection Rosenbaum has assembled cogent essays from some of the most respected criminal justice researchers Contributors examine the experiences of many agencies in the U S Canada and Britain that have adopted the community policing philosophy candidly describe successes and failures and provide an assessment of the future The volume separates fact from fiction and should shorten the learning curve of any law enforcement administrator who seeks to implement this alternative method of policing Highly recommended for upper division undergraduates and graduate students A must read for law enforcement practitioners and criminal justice faculty S L Gottlieb in Choice In The Challenge of Community Policing Dennis P Rosenbaum has made an important and timely contribution to policing in America Important because he has assembled the work of a group of the nation s most thoughtful and respected researchers on policing that provides a current assessment of the field s progress toward reframing the way America s cities are policed Timely because it comes on the threshold of the greatest infusion of federal dollars into local policing in the history of our nation The greatest portion of those dollars are dedicated to putting officers on the street to engage in community policing The Challenge offers considerable insight into the experience of police agencies in America Canada and England that have had the courage to move into uncharted waters with the hope of having greater impact on crime violence and fear The complexity of the issues are acknowledged while appropriate cautions and important questions are raised This book will become a useful tool for researchers and practitioners as more police agencies make serious attempts to work with members of their community in a partnership to solve problems Chief Darrel W Stephens St Petersburg Florida I recently had the opportunity to review The Challenge of Community Policing by Dennis P Rosenbaum and found the book to be an excellent resource for both the academic and practitioner The information is current presented in a well balanced manner and relies on respected scholars who understand the concept of community policing Given the importance of this movement in police practices not to mention the central role community policing has in the current federal crime control initiative The Challenge of Community Policing provides a thorough view of the philosophy and issues Dr Rosenbaum s work is an important contribution to the literature David L Carter Professor and Director National Center for Community Policing

The Function of the Media in Community Policing Joanne Marie Ziembo-Vogl, 1998 While media were identified by Robert Trojanowicz as one of the Big Six necessary for successful implementation and maintenance of community policing initiatives the exact function of the media in community policing been unexplored and untested The purpose of this research was to examine the nature of media s function per se and to identify the news production processes and police media relationships micro and macro levels inherent in the media s involvement in community policing Given the paucity of research related to the function of media in community policing the interdisciplinary nature attached to examining law enforcement and media organizations and the sociological underpinnings which surround such an inquiry a case study approach was chosen to examine the research topic The Lansing Police Department and the Lansing State Journal were chosen as research organizations During the 1989 to 1993 time frame of this study Lansing Police Department enjoyed a national reputation as a model community policing agency practicing the Trojanowicz Paradigm and the State Journal was the city's only daily paper. This case study was composed of several qualitative components: field observation at the Lansing State Journal; interviews of community police, public information, and other Lansing Police Department officers; interviews of Lansing State Journal police beat and other reporters; and a five-year chronological content analysis of police-related newspaper articles. An interdisciplinary literature review including expressions of media's function as specified in government and community policing literature, the historical evolution of media function from a journalistic perspective, civic journalism, and a discussion of Ericson Baranak and Chan's paradigm research related to the police and news production provided a framework for this research. Several significant findings related to reporting news production and media function emerged from the data and portend interest for law enforcement. First, police-related reporting became significantly more positive after the implementation of community policing in Lansing. This finding remained significant in spite of an increased amount of violent crime reporting. Second, newspaper articles related to community policing were not written by police beat reporters. Community Policing coverage was realized via feature and metro reporters who developed stories about Lansing neighborhoods. Third, police failed to educate the media about community policing, which in turn hindered the media from educating the public. In terms of producing news, conflict between individual officers and reporters was superseded by the news production process. This conflict, which often hindered the gathering of information, was circumvented by reporters who accessed alternative sources when police gates were closed. This fact is reflective of the media's main function in community policing: providing news.

Community Policing for Law Enforcement Managers, 1995

Community Policing Geoffrey P. Alpert, Alexis Russell Piquero, 1998. This collection reviews and analyzes aspects of community policing that have prompted increased attention at both the academic and practitioner levels.

The Politics of Community Policing William Lyons, 1999-02-09. Community policing, the author argues, does not necessarily empower the community but often increases the power of the police.

Police Mission Dilip K. Das, Arvind Verma, 2003. Das (State University of New York) and Verma (Indiana University) compare the element of militarism in American police culture with that of many other agencies around the world. They apply traditional and open system organizational theories to the typical American police department and advocate that police organizations become learning organizations concerned with improving work relationships, processes, results, and the capacity to create their own future.
