Domalewska: You have carried out extensive research on misinformation and disinformation that has helped us understand how fake news is distributed and what strategies are implemented to distribute it on social media. You have proved that "[f]alsehood [was] diffused significantly farther, faster, deeper, and more broadly than the truth in all categories of information, and the effects were more pronounced for false political news than for false news about terrorism, natural disasters, science, urban legends, or financial information" (Nosoughi et al., 2018, p. 1146). This means that false political news was more viral, spread deeper and diffused more broadly than any other category of fake news (Aral, 2020, p. 47). Social bots distributed both true and false information at the same time, which suggests that it is humans who are responsible for spreading fake news rather than bots and there are several reasons for that. First, fake news is more novel than the truth, hence it is more likely to be shared by users who want to be seen as being in the know or having access to inside information, which confers their social status (which you call the novelty hypothesis). Second, by examining users' replies to
