Chicken And Dumplings Raleigh E. McMillon,2005-05 I was born on Long Island during the time Civil was still fighting for Rights in the Deep South But up in the Northeast there was a different battle being fought There was a clash of the social class of no class Everybody was trying to get in where they could fit in Every person wanted a piece of the pie What we didn't know at the time was that the pie had already been devoured and we were left fighting amongst each other for mere crumbs scattered upon the table I am a product of that fight I am a student of the class of no class Not to add another unnecessary justification but as children of an uncensored census it seemed as long as I obeyed that which I was told I would be all right living in the life that we lived The truth I wasn't living We weren't living My folks who chose to teach us the art of survival perceptibly had little faith in God's promise These days 38 years later when most people turn their back on change I am accepting change for the promise of a change I still live amongst the people with no voice everywhere Come hear our story
