Best Chicken Breeds R. J. Ruppenthal, 2012-09-28 Thinking about getting chickens Not sure what kind is best If you're ready to learn which types of hens lay lots of eggs on a regular basis make good pets and fit happily in small sized yards you've come to the right place This e booklet which is a companion to my Backyard Chickens for Beginners Getting the Best Chickens Choosing Coops Feeding and Care and Beating City Chicken Laws also available as an e book or in print on Amazon provides you with information on 12 types of chickens which are best suited for a small back yard flock As a bonus I've included 5 more breeds in the Exotic Poultry chapter at the end There's a lot of free information online about different kinds of chickens It's great to have this available but sorting through it can take a lot of time When I decided to get chickens I spent many hours researching different chicken breeds in books and on the Internet At the time I had a small yard in the city The only thing I knew about chickens was that the hens lay the eggs and the roosters make most of the noise From my research I learned that there are as many as 175 different kinds of chickens in the world However only 12 chicken breeds met my criteria which were Regular and prolific egg layers Comfortable in an enclosed coop and run area Preferably not too loud Friendly around people First I only had enough space for 2-4 chickens so it made sense to choose a kind that would lay lots of eggs If a hen from Breed A lays an average of two eggs per week while a Breed B hen averages four or five eggs per week then why would I want Breed A That's 100 eggs per year versus 200-250 If I'm feeding these birds and keeping them for egg production then I want my chickens to be serious about laying In this booklet we will cover the most productive types of egg laying hens Second I heard that not all chickens are comfortable in enclosed spaces like the coop and enclosed run area I was building Some breeds are flighty and nervous preferring to free range all the time and often perching on fences and flying into trees if you let them out But other chickens handle confinement well remain happy in small spaces and are likely to stay in a fenced yard when you let them out to free range I put the happy ones on my list While I like to allow my hens to free range in the backyard I cannot do this all day every day Like most of you I have a day job and am away from home most of the day When I am gone our chickens stay in their coop and enclosed run area When I'm home I'll let them out into the yard Getting them down from trees and chasing them through neighbors yards is not how I want to spend my evenings Unless you have a huge amount of space choosing birds that can handle confinement is probably a wise bet for you too You will find them in this booklet Third with a small city yard and neighbors close on every side I wanted to find some quiet chickens Roosters are the loud ones and I had no intention of getting a rooster which are not needed for egg production and are illegal in my city anyway However some hens crow a bit also and this can be particularly loud in the morning or when they announce that they have laid eggs There is always a chance of getting a loud chicken from any breed but a consensus has emerged on which breeds are the quietest on a regular basis This information took me the longest to find but I will save you time by summarizing it in this e-booklet
