What can we do to stop children from experiencing child sexual abuse in the United States?

1. Bolen, R. (2003). Child Sexual Abuse: Prevention or Promotion? Social Work, 48(2), 174-185. Retrieved from <http://www.wjster.org/lib.utep.edu/stable/23720842>

In this article, Rebecca Bolen expresses her belief that prevention programs do not typically help reduce child sexual abuse from happening. She shows that studies have shown that this is not the case. Bolen says that these prevention programs shouldn't be for the children who experience child abuse, but to those adults who do the abusing. Child sexual abusers should get more mental help so that they never harm any other children again. Studies mentioned in this article also show that prevention programs haven't helped in the past years, so what makes us believe that they will help prevent child abuse in the future? I chose this article because it is so broad on details to child sexual abuse and prevention programs. It gives the reader a sign of hope that child abuse can be stopped, but using different ways, other than these prevention programs.

2. Chasan-Taber, L., & Tabachnick, J. (1999). Evaluation of a Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Program. Sexual Abuse, 11(4), 279-292.

The authors in this article use statistics to show just how much and how often children are abused sexually. They said that half a million children are abused each year- this is in the United States only! People try to stop offenders by punishing them and by helping/guiding victims and their families, but does this really prevent abusers from harming any more children? Prevention programs are a common way for people to seek help. This article discusses more broad and bigger ideas and ways to help prevent child abuse. These ideas include interventions that mainly target adults, communications strategies that help specialists talk to victims and allows them to recognize abusers, and a systems changed strategy that is supposed to educate decision-makers and leaders. This article discusses all the successes that interventions have. The article explains the pros and cons of prevention programs and how they help victims get past their experiences, or how to avoid them and that is why this article relates to my topic and research question.

3. Daro, D. (1994). Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse. The Future of Children, 4(2), 198 -223. doi:10.2307/1602531

This journal tells us that there are social groups that will help any children that are sexually and mentally abused. The journal also states that there are some cases in which children learn from their experience and their experiences help them move forward and help other children in the same cases overcome their fear. Children are typically abused between the ages of 7 through 12. Children who experience child abuse conclude that prevention of child abuse is an essential priority. Child sexual abuse can be done in three levels: primary prevention, secondary prevention, and tertiary prevention, which are all explained in the text.
