Journalism and Diversity Miriam Grabenheinrich, 2026-01-01 People with a migration background are according to numerous analyses disproportionately portrayed in problematic contexts in German reporting To change this there are various initiatives such as awards for diversity sensitive reporting or analyses of the media representation of migrants However the sensitization of journalists to cultural diversity is hardly addressed even though it was demanded in the 2007 National Integration Plan Moreover most previous activities are based on the assumption of homogeneous national cultures For example many content analyses examine reporting about the migrants especially the Turks but neglect various diversity categories e g gender age Such homogenizations reinforce normative notions of difference Therefore this volume analyzes the contribution that critical ethnological perspectives on culture diversity and exclusion can make to the engagement with diversity in journalism To this end the journalistic handling of cultural diversity is examined content analysis focus group analysis The results feed into the design of diversity training that can be used in journalistic education and training

Media in Motion Elisabeth Eide, 2016-04-29 Owing to increased migration dating from the 1990s Nordic countries have gone through substantial cultural and social changes resulting in increased debate surrounding the politics of multiculturalism One of the central realms of the discussion around multiculturalism in the Nordic region concerns the media which is considered to be a vital factor in the construction of society's values as well as an essential tool in the integration process of migrants providing as it does a symbolic arena for learning about and becoming part of society This collection draws together the latest research from Denmark Finland Norway and Sweden to look at different aspects of the relationship between media and migration in the Nordic region Exploring the role played by the media in nation building and the power of the media in the definition of who belongs in society Media in Motion examines the practices of inclusion and exclusion that characterise mainstream media representations The book also examines the manner in which recent technological changes suggest the emergence of a transnational and cosmopolitan media landscape a space which blurs the boundaries of the national and transnational as well as between the public and the private with significant implications for the ways migrants may take and become part of society As such it will be of interest to those working in the fields of media race and ethnicity colonialism and postcolonial studies and migration
