Ceramic Processes:

Phase Diagrams and Ceramic Processes Anna E. McHale, 2013-04-17 Ceramic products are fabricated from selected and consolidated raw materials through the application of thermal and mechanical energy. The complex connections between thermodynamics, chemical equilibria, fabrication processes, phase development, and ceramic properties define the undergraduate curriculum in Ceramic Science and Ceramic Engineering. Phase diagrams are usually introduced into the engineering curriculum during the study of physical chemistry prior to specialization into ceramic engineering. This creates an artificial separation between consideration of the equilibrium description of the chemically heterogeneous system and the engineering and physical processes required for phase microstructure and property development in ceramic materials. Although convenient for instructional purposes, the separation of these topics limits the effective application of phase diagram information by the ceramic engineer in research and manufacturing problem solving. The nature of oxide phases, which define their useful engineering properties, are seldom linked to the stability of those phases, which underlies their reliability as engineered products. Similarly, ceramic fabrication processes are seldom discussed within the context of the equilibrium or metastable phase diagram. In this text, phase diagrams are presented with a discussion of ceramics properties and processing. Particular emphasis is placed on the nature of the oxides themselves, their structural and dielectric properties, which results in unique and stable product performance. Any set of systematic property measurements can be the basis for a phase diagram; every experiment is an experiment in the approach to phase equilibrium.

Manufacturing Processes

Thomas G. Gregor, 1976 An introduction to ceramic materials and the wide and varied uses of ceramic products, describing the techniques to form, dry, fire, decorate, and finish them. Processing of Crystalline Ceramics Hare, 2012-12-06 This volume constitutes the Proceedings of the November 7-9, 1977 Conference on PROCESSING OF CRYSTALLINE CERAMICS held at North Carolina State University in Raleigh. It was the Fourteenth in a series of University Conferences on Ceramic Science initiated in 1964 and still coordinated by a founding group of four ceramic-related institutions, of which North Carolina State University is a charter member, along with the University of California at Berkeley, Notre Dame University, and the New York State College of Ceramics at Alfred University. In addition, two other ceramic-oriented schools, the University of Florida and Case Western Reserve University, have also hosted Conferences in the series. These research-oriented conferences, each uniquely concerned with a timely ceramic theme, have been well attended by audiences which typically were both international and interdisciplinary in character. Their published Proceedings have been well received and are frequently cited. This three-day conference was concerned with scientific aspects of all process steps which must be combined and controlled effectively and sequentially in producing crystalline ceramics, both oxides and nonoxides, and the utilization of these principles in developing processes for several classes of advanced ceramics critical to present and future technology.

Ceramic Technology and Processing

Alan G. King, 2001-12-01 Perfect for the new technician or engineer entering the ceramics industry as well as for the old hand who needs an update on some aspect of ceramics processing this resource provides practical laboratory oriented answers to such typical processing problems as particle segregation agglomeration contamination pressure gradients adherence to tooling and temperature gradients during drying and firing The author examines the difficulties of practical testing and processing in the ceramic laboratory such as vast differences in scale and equipment and shows how to evaluate results taking such variables into account Once the laboratory work is satisfactorily completed the rest of the book explores serious issues involved in transferring technology from the lab bench to the plant floor and then to the customer The author gives advice on dealing with real life problems such as allocating human and capital resources and overcoming customer wariness of being first to try new procedures and processes Each section contains practical hands on suggestions on performing and sometimes avoiding certain tasks bringing to the reader key information that is at best sparsely available in the industry As the author states Laboratory skills are gained by hands on experience The intent of this book is to accelerate the process
