Subasinghe, 2003-01-01 This report was prepared within the framework of the FAO Fisheries Department's continued efforts to contribute to poverty alleviation and hunger reduction in developing countries through aquaculture development. It seeks to analyse the reasons and factors especially the role of public sector policies which were behind aquaculture development in China. The aim is to make the Chinese experience available to other parts of the world especially developing countries to enable these countries to evaluate ways whereby they could benefit from this experience of sustainable and lucrative aquaculture practices. The report discusses valuable lessons that can be learned from the Chinese experience. Aquaculture Development in China Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. The book is divided into three sections: Principles, Practices, and Species Specific Public Policy for Sustainable Development. An outgrowth of a workshop held as part of the Aquaculture Interchange Program with examples from around the globe, carefully edited by PingSun Leung, Patricia O'Bryen, and Cheng Sheng Lee, this volume will be an important reference for all researchers, professionals, economists, and policy makers involved in selecting
