

A black and white photograph capturing a historical scene of bridge construction in Chicago. The foreground is dominated by the dark, heavy steel framework of a bridge, with several large vertical columns and horizontal beams. Two workers are visible, sitting on a pile of gravel or rubble near the base of one of the columns. In the background, a wide river flows, with a large, multi-story building featuring a prominent clock tower rising behind it. Other buildings and a boat are also visible in the distance. The overall atmosphere is one of industrial activity and urban development.
