

COPING WITH PROSTATE CANCER

It is important to realize you are not alone. Getting advice from people who have had prostate cancer can help you understand the disease, treatment options, and how to cope. You may also want to consider joining a support group. Support groups can help you:

- Get help to decide what you want to do with your cancer. You can get information and support for people coping with prostate cancer. You can share your feelings and experiences with people who understand the disease.
- Share your fears and get helpful feedback from people who have been through the same experience.
- Learn to manage prostate cancer treatment side effects.

Understanding how the test works

It is important to understand how the test works. The test is done by a doctor. The doctor will insert a thin tube into your rectum. The tube will be used to take a sample of your prostate. The sample will be sent to a lab. The lab will look for signs of prostate cancer. The test is called a digital rectal exam (DRE).

Quality of Life, Benefit Finding, and Coping with Prostate Cancer: an Examination of Ethnic Differences Mikal A. Rasheed, 2008 This study examined measures of disease specific quality of life DSQOL coping and benefit finding for differences between ethnic groups in a diverse sample of men treated for localized prostate cancer The relationship between DSQOL and benefit finding was also evaluated along with the relationship between coping and benefit finding Ethnicity was evaluated as a possible moderator of the relationship between DSQOL and benefit finding and coping was examined as a possible mediator Results demonstrated that while minority men did show decrements in urinary function sexual function scores were similar between groups Furthermore minority men reported higher levels of benefit finding as well as more frequent use of active and passive coping strategies DSQOL was not associated with benefit finding and the relationship was not moderated by ethnicity or mediated by coping However benefit finding was associated with ethnic minority status religious group identification and less yearly income Both active and passive coping composites were also related to benefit finding These findings contribute to current literature on factors related to benefit finding in prostate cancer survivors Limitations of the current study as well as future directions are explored in the discussion
