Department: English Studies      Email: enl270@uconn.edu

Prerequisites: ENGL 1100000      Address: 610-622 (Open Access Faculty Commons)

Office Hours: There are no sections in the Spring Semester. This semester, delivery dates are provided in brackets.

Course Description

This course studies the evolution of a literary text from authorial to canonical status. We examine the process of literary canonization in the United States, paying special attention to the role of the literary critic in the process. We explore the ways in which the literary canon has been constructed and how it has changed over time. We also explore the ways in which the literary canon has been challenged and how it has been redefined.

This course is designed to be relevant to students of American literature, history, and culture. It is also relevant to students of the history of the United States and the history of the English language.

Students will be asked to analyze and evaluate the ways in which the literary canon has been constructed and how it has changed over time. They will also be asked to evaluate the ways in which the literary canon has been challenged and how it has been redefined.
