

DHTML OVERVIEW

Dynamic web pages, often called on-line pages with interactive features and a dynamic design process, HTML is not a design method. However, for online environments, HTML is combined with scripting languages, including JavaScript, CSS, and sometimes on-line databases and servers. Web page designers use software packages, HTML editors and browsers which allow them to format design layouts on Microsoft Internet Explorer or Netscape Navigator. Software packages such as Dreamweaver, HomeSite, and others have become a popular means to create web pages. The use of these tools and templates can reduce the time and effort required to create a web page. DHTML is not a new technology but rather a combination of existing technologies.
