 groups and corresponding sculptures to provide insight into the hierarchical distribution and use of ritual and administrative space in temple and palace architecture Identifying which spaces were the most accessible and most public and which spaces were segregated and highly private Dr Parmington demonstrates how sculptural iconographic and hieroglyphic content varies considerably when found in public common or private elite space Drawing on specific examples from the Classic Maya and other early civilisations he demonstrates that by examining the intent in the distribution of architecture and art the variation and function of the artistic themes represented in sculpture and other monumental works of art can be better
