The Influence Line Approach to the Analysis of Rigid Frames Edward Buckley,2003-09-30 The Influence Line Approach to the Analysis of Rigid Frames offers a simple method of analysis of indeterminate structures It is original and independent of other methods The author derived these equations by applying an algebraic rather than an arithmetical method of distribution of fixed end moments His method is fully explained and illustrated by worked examples The equations listed in the Tables in The Influence Line Approach to the Analysis of Rigid Frames offer a simple approach to the analysis of rigid frames including building frames rendering them statically determinate for any system of loading static or moving and including the self weight of a structure Particularly useful aspects to the reader are The equations are of an elementary nature consisting only of distribution factors and the coefficient of a span length and to which values from zero to unity are given The equations can be used to analyze frames the members of which can be either of constant or variable cross section and in both cases distributions of fixed end moments are not required In addition the evaluation of fixed end moments is not required when the frame consists of members of constant cross section The equations are independent of other methods of analysis requiring neither the use of model analysis nor the application of linear equations The equations offer a good indication of structural behavior The Tables lend themselves to expansion catering for different degrees of end fixation The Influence Line Approach to the Analysis of Rigid Frames can be taught not only to university undergraduate students but also to those pursuing middle level courses in Civil Engineering Structural Engineering and Building In addition practicing assistant structural designers will find it a useful reference work
